Les échanges migratoires sont à la source de notre richesse culturelle

Dans l'histoire de l'humanité, les peuples ont toujours fui la misère, les guerres et les catastrophes naturelles, et ce, à la recherche de meilleures conditions de vie.

Ces migrations ont toujours permis un échange de cultures, de langues et de créativités.

Tout comme la forêt amazonienne qui est fertilisée par les sables riches en minéraux du Sahara, transportés par le vent à travers l'Atlantique, les sociétés d'accueil peuvent s'enrichir grâce à l'apport novateur des migrants.

Regardez ces témoignages:

Les migrations humaines

Réfugiés, demandeurs d'asile et personnes déplacées internes

Les réfugiés sont des personnes qui fuient des conflits ou des persécutions. Leur statut est défini par le droit international (La Convention de 1951 relative au statut des réfugiés).

Ils ne peuvent pas être expulsés ou renvoyés dans des endroits où leur vie ou leur paix sont à risque.

Les demandeurs d'asile sont des personnes qui recherchent une protection internationale et espèrent obtenir le statut de réfugiés.

Les personnes déplacées internes ont fui au sein de leur propre pays en quête de sécurité.

80 Mio de personnes déplacées de force dans le monde

- 25,9 Mio de réfugiés
- 3,5 Mio de demandeurs d'asile
- 50,9 Mio de déplacés internes
